Four steps left...

Slow down...

Come closer...

Stop.

How's my bowtie?

It isn't straight.

Are you sure?

Should I check in the mirror?

There we go.

Can you give me my gloves?

What about me? How am I?

You couldn't be any more perfect.

What a nice suit you have!

Say...

Hmmm?

It was a gift.

Well, that's what I think.

I find that hard to believe.

Let's see...

I took her for a little girl, she exhumed innocence.

Regardless, she sure took her time to enjoy everything in the shop.

She inspected a number of suits, feeling them with her hands like she was crumbling a cake. I could hear the suits purr with pleasure.

The owner, after making her way to the unhooked ones and answering all the client's questions (with incredible patience, I should note), folded the suit that she finally chose and put it in a box.

You should see him wrap the box with the ribbon; it's an art.

An art the client does not care for.

Ah, she's looking up at me! Did she hear my remarks?

In the same bag, the owner put the suit

she had brought with her and had asked him to look at.

It seemed to have done its time.

She picked the same size as that one for the new suit.

I believe this is a passing of the torch.

I'm left wondering, like always,

who is the person who will put on these sleeves?
